Wonder Words

c/o DC COMICS, INC., 75 ROCKEFELLER PLAZA, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10019

Dear Len:

I'm a word processor by profession. I volunteer a great deal of time to The Hunger Project, and have done so for the past year. I teach word processing in what may well be the only volunteer-run word processing department around.

You've no idea how pleased I was that Wonder Woman acknowledged us in the first installment about the Adjudicator. I was thrilled, and for about a week, every time I thought of it, I smiled. I'm smiling now as I write this!

Fifteen or twenty years ago, I was an avid reader of DC Comics. I first read Superman and then Batman comics. The Justice League of America turned me on to other super-heroes, like Flash and Green Lantern. But I always had an extra-special regard for Wonder Woman because she was the only woman in the Justice League. Feminism is as important to me as is ending hunger, so you can see why I loved Wonder Woman's acknowledgement of my Hunger Project! I was also happy to learn that WW has sisters in the JLA these days!

I'm writing personally and have no authority to thank you on anyone else's behalf. But I can share that many of us, volunteers and staff, are happy and encouraged that Wonder Woman is working with us as we work to make a difference in the world.

Thanks for writing, Todd. We always appreciate hearing how our stories are capable of connecting with the real world. We also heard from a colleague of yours in Los Angeles, Donald Spuehler, who wrote in to express his appreciation for the reference.—TOF

From: Athena, Goddess of Wisdom
Mt. Olympus,
Somewhere in the Cosmos

Dear Diana,

I don't usually write letters, but communications just haven't been the same since that Adjudicator mess. He really managed to screw things up with all that shifting around of worlds and beings and everything else. I'm not even sure if this will get to you because my home may not even be in your dimension any longer, but I am attempting it anyway. To aid me in this attempt, I have enlisted the aid of a mortal from your planet. The Terran Postal Service is not exactly Cosmic Expressal Service, but it will have to do in this instance.

Child, I have watched your life from the moment you entered that world, not very closely at times, but aware of you, just the same. However, recently you have taken up a big part of my attention, starting with your wound at the hands of that mentally incompetent person who also managed to snuff out the life of your friend/mentor, I Ching.

Do you know, of all my children (and you are one of my 'children', believe me. Oh, I know that gutter wench, Aphrodite, is constantly taking all the credit for the Amazons, but c'mon. You don't honestly believe she had the brains to think up that concept all by herself, do you? Of course not.) Let's see, where was I? Oh yes. Of all my children, you have had the strangest and most complex life.

Life, you see, tends to follow a pretty straight path with some curves, and on occasion, reach a fork in the road. But you! Your life seems to flow until it reaches a block and immediately zips off into some totally different direction. It's very nerve-wracking. However, I've not really had any major complaints on how you've conducted yourself (just on how others have treated you). I was impressed by how you conducted your life at the United Nations, and at NASA. As I said, I've had no complaints. Until now.

BY MY HELM OF GOLD, WHAT IS THIS "MEEK AND MILD" ROUTINE?!

Oh, just a moment. I appear to have frightened the mortal. She's hiding under the desk. Oh, she ventures that if I sheath my sword, she will come out. Very well. Now, where was I?

Why, oh why, oh why...

One 'why' will be sufficient....Yes, I know I instructed you to write down everything I say, but one 'why' will be sufficient.

Good help is so hard to find.

Why do you insist on portraying this mockery of everything Amazons stand for? I can't honestly believe that you enjoy being the 'plain' Diana Prince. Yet you persist. Why?

At NASA, you were a modern woman. A woman who knew what she was and proud of it. But now, you hide behind this depressing mask of primness and somber garb. It's positively nauseating. Even your life as a super-heroine has suffered. When you're not battling villains which, for the most part, are beneath your notice, then you are spending your time, mooning over the mortal, Trevor.

Now, before you object, understand that I am not insulting the mortal. I'm sure Trevor has his good points. I can't think of any at the moment, but I'm almost positive he has some. All I'm saying is that if he truly loved you, then he would be able to recognize you through any disguise. And if you truly loved him, and if this was a mature and lasting relationship, then you would trust him with your secret. And there wouldn't be this need to create such a...a...boring secret identity. After all, the only person you seem to be truly worried about discovering your identity is the Trevor mortal. Live a little, child. Do not close your life in as you have been doing.

You are an Amazon. Surely you do not need to suppress every aspect of that beneath the tedious Prince disguise. Show me that no matter what you wear, you are proud of being a woman

As for the Etta Candy mortal, I really can't understand how she has not figured out your identity. After all, you share an abode and she cannot be completely bereft of common sense. If she is, then I cannot approve your choice of friends. I mean, surround yourself with stupid, and you end up stupid yourself.

The mortal, Darnell. I suggest that you corner him in some dark alley some night as Wonder Woman, and explain to him why he should cease harassing you. Physically, if necessary.

You should visit your mother more. She gets lonely. Also, get her advice on your problems. Hippolyte is very intelligent (my doing, actually) and she's got a lot of 'smarts' besides. You would do well to listen to her. I also suggest that you let her teach you a few moves. She didn't beat Hercules with her good looks, you know (truth be told, it was her good looks that got her into that mess in the first place. Of course, she'd call Aphrodite for aid. She knew I'd slap her silly for acting so stupid.)

I've also heard some muttering that your younger sister might discover her true heritage. Be there for your mother when Donna tells her. Unless, that is, Donna remembers that she was raised an Amazon and isn't gonna throw it back in her mother's face, forsaking it all. After all, once an Amazon, Always an Amazon.

And go visit your sister, Nubia. Unless you've forgotten her, too. (Oooh, I could just strangle that Aphrodite when I think of how she threw around those Mists of Nepenthe without any consideration of your previous life.) Families should stick together.

Picky, picky, picky. Relatives are always on your case. They tell you they only want what's best for you, then they proceed to tell you what the best is! Don't get me wrong, Athena. I'm grateful for everything you've given me, but do you have to throw it up in my face, every time I make a teeny tiny slip? It isn't polite to take that tone with your creator! Onward...—TOF)

Dear Roy, Marv, Gene, Frank, and Laurie:

WONDER WOMAN #294 was just great. The fight with Blockbuster was thrilling from start to finish. However, I really want to comment on the Commander Video plot. I was very intrigued with the idea of electronic games warping people's minds. First the truckdriver is affected by the video game, and then Blockbuster is, and finally Steve.

People losing their minds because of video games might seem fictitious to most people, but it really isn't. Kids and adults alike are addicted to video games like Space Invaders, Pac-Man, Warlords, and the new craze: Donkey Kong. People are willing to spend their hard-earned cash at arcades, or buy home-computer systems.

Thank you for a truly thought-provoking story.

David Dennis
1533 Garden Drive
Franklin, PA 16323

Then there are people who are addicted to comic books, David. When it comes right down to it, everyone has his or her own pet obsession. Some are merely healthier than others. Video games are fairly harmless, in and of themselves. Anything is open to misuse. But the control should come from within people, not the outside, don't you think? It beats smoking or any other habit where the end result is danger and/or death — TOF

Dear Gene, Marv, Roy and Laurie:

After the earth-shaking excitement of the last three issues, the peaceful pace of "Rampage!" (if anything can be peaceful with a title like that) was a pleasant change of scene. Mark Desmond is a remarkable menace and well-suited to the Amazon. I have always thought that he and the Batman were too different to be foes. His strength is ill-matched with Batman's mental prowess. But Wonder Woman can match him feat for feat. And she is more inclined to try to talk him down before using force, whereas Batman goes right into battle.

The cover was hilarious, with Mark throwing miniature missiles at Diana. Also funny was the "Commander Video" game that entranced everyone who played it. And Diana's bewilderment at how anyone could be so interested in a game was cute and typical of her.

"By Dusk's Dying Light" was yet another outstanding Huntress story. I agree that this character could very easily support her own book, but I like her here. She fits in well as a back-up, especially with Wonder Woman. Her anger at the beginning of the story reminds me of her father's rage at an innocent person's oppression.

I didn't guess the "old man's" identity till just before it was revealed, and I'm glad you used him. Alfred is one of the best characters in the Batman's history and he is very sweet. And where better to find the former ham himself than in a theater? Thanks for including the gentleman's gentleman.

Hooray for Harry! Love that guy. He's brave yet sensitive, egotistical yet fair. He is the best choice for Helena's love affair and I hope he returns soon.

Dusty Leary

117 Emeline Place
Morehead City, NC 28557

We confess to a certain weakness for Harry ourselves, Dusty. He just happens to hit us the right way. And we're real proud of the superb job Joey Cavalieri is doing on the strip. Perhaps someday the Huntress will have her own book... but in the meantime, she's in very capable hands!—TOF

Dear Editor,

The Huntress (the most exciting woman in the DC line) is supposed to be in the talking stage of getting her own mini-series or her own book. (IHOPEIHOPEIHOPEI) If a fan's vote, request, or demand ever meant anything, then PLEASE give this girl a try. She's cool, delightfully ruthless, totally sensational in every sense of the word. So please convince the powers-that-be to give Helena a crack at her own book.

Now I know that if the Huntress were to leave the WONDER WOMAN book, WW's sales might go down. And the name of the game is profit, as well as entertainment. But I always have this fear that Huntress will be bumped off the book in order to devote more space to the lead character. And I just HATE the idea of Batman's daughter being cast off to limbo. I'll be Helena Wayne's most loyal supporter. Just don't vanish her off to never-never land. (You know, I once spent $20 just to have her image sprayed on a T-shirt.)

(That's probably against one of our trademark regulations. David! It's called infringement—and it means we own the copyright. On the other hand, thanks for the free plug!—TOF)

'As for Wonder Woman, I only have one change I'd like to see in her. Have her reveal to Steve that she is Wonder Woman. Have her convince Col. Trevor that she is NOT in Military Intelligence in order to baby-sit him, but primarily to pursue her chosen mission to protect the Earth from itself. You could also have her confess that she became Trevor's adjutant because of a personal fondness. (But not to baby-sit.)

Just think, Trevor could send Diana to certain "hotspots" (tagging along surely), where it's obvious that Wonder Woman will be needed. And Steve could cover for Capt. Prince while WW is off on a JLA mission.

"C'mon, Diana! I'm in a spot! Bail me out of this, will ya? Put on the suit and get those Commie creeps before they off the President!"

"But Steve, how can we be sure they are Communist? They could be U.S. citizens who are not satisfied with the way things are going."

"Give me a break, Diana! Let's follow the scenario, and put on the suit and stop those loony-tunes before it's too late! Then we can use your magic rope to find out for sure. JEEZ!"

"I already did it at super-speed, Steve. I just wanted to hear you talk like that. I love it when you do that. HAHAHA."

Seriously now, I think Steve should know the truth. Not only will they make a better team, but they could become more intimate lovers as well. Besides, the military frowns on its soldiers going AWOL for hours on end. So Steve should know.

David R. Wood
6541 E. Garwood Cr.
Knoxville, TN 37918

Well! Your "dialogue" between Steve and Diana started out like some sort of political satire, but it rapidly became familiar to us. It's apparently copy "lifted" from a certain TV show which shall remain nameless. Frankly, even if weren't, it would still sound like a cartoon. That's not the image we want to establish for WW and in case it wasn't clear before, it is now Steve and Diana aren't stand-up comics. Humor plays a very valuable part in a comic, especially in creating credibility for a character. But by no means do we want to start "THE STEVE AND DIANA SHOW"!! Never fear, though, (in the event that you feel we're being too hard on you, which we never are, deliberately) you have brought up a valid point: that Steve should know Diana's secret. And Dan Mishkin can thrash that one out, since he's the responsible party involved. Over to you, Dan! Tamsyn O'Flynn
